Best Places to live in NY

GREAT EIGHTS

The best apartments in the city's affordable housing program

New York is one of the leading cities in the country attempting to provide citizens with quality housing. Certain developers have gotten so good at it, some of the homes are in state-of-the-art buildings with amenities like computer lounges, 24-hour security, and roof gardens with river views. Tenants living under the Section 8 Federal subsidy program pay one-third of their income as rent. In the five boroughs, the average rent paid in the program for NYC Department of Housing Preservation vouchers is $1,534 with average income of around $15,001.27. Vouchers for Section 8, though, are disappearing as the federal government cuts program funds. Individuals normally receive Section 8 vouchers from NYC Housing Authority. The waiting list, however, is 124,000 people long with over 40% of current voucher holders disabled.

Developers of low-income housing receive vouchers on a per-project basis. They use Section 8 as one of several ways to subsidize construction and maintenance costs. The federal government pays the additional rent on top of the tenant's payment to bring the total to fair market value for that area or neighborhood. There are 91,000 Section 8 units available in the city. The latest presidential budget requested $640 million cut (out of $9.34 billion) to the 35-year-old program nationally.

"We live in an era of constrained public resources," says Shola Olaito, vice president and market leader for Enterprise Community Partners, a nonprofit partner with top local builders of affordable housing. “This is one of the most important and successful housing programs of all time. Quality housing changes people’s lives and is at the foundation of neighborhood growth. New York City leads the entire affordable industry in thinking about how to do this right. That goes for social service programs and housing design,” O’Toole’s got that right. Some of these homes would command top prices in their neighborhood. Others have won national architectural awards. Here are five locations citywide where Section 8 recipients have great homes.

Continued on next page

GO TO BESTPLACES.NYDAILYNEWS.COM FOR MORE REAL ESTATE GUIDES

WEST FARMS SQ.

1 West Farms Square Plaza, Bronx
Fordham Bedford Housing Corp./University Neighborhood Housing Program

Yvonne Añonzo (inset) has lots to celebrate in her four-bedroom home.

Amanda Marcotte / New York Daily News

TWO BLOCKS from the Bronx Zoo, West Farms is an eight-building renovation recently purchased by respected Bronx-based affordable housing developer Fordham Bedford and University Neighborhood Housing Program.

“McO’s is the largest project we’ve undertaken,” says Fordham Bedford executive director John Reilly, who joined the affordable development organization 32 years ago. “It impacted something this large can help the community inside and outside the complex.”

Inside the 326-unit project, lobbies have been updated, landscaping redone, playgrounds repaired and new elevators, security measures and central-heating system added. Residents feel a new sense of community.

Yvonne Añonzo moved to the complex in 1976. She rents a four-bedroom apartment on the eighth floor for 30 percent of her income.

Painted brown with black leather couches and wooden cabinets, the dwelling is home to Añonzo’s daughter and grandchildren, too.

“Just because your poor doesn’t mean you have to live in a mess,” she says, “I treasure my home. When you have something nice, you should take care of it.”

THE HEGEMAN

39 Hegeman Ave., Brownsville
Common Ground

ON A mission to end homelessness in New York City, Common Ground has learned to turn tiny spaces into efficient living machines. Designed by Cook & Fox Architects, the Hegeman is a technologically advanced and eco-friendly that all resident energy (lights and televisions but not alarm clocks) turn on in a resident’s home when they swipe their identification cards to exit the building. Interiors are constructed with durable, nontoxic materials.

While all 161 homes are studios, the rooms are designed to maximize space for the single user. One hundred homes are reserved for formerly homeless; 61 homes for low-income adults. They have mini-galley kitchens, desks, window benches, wooden furniture and large windows for lights. The building has a green roof, solar panels, computer room and inner courtyard.

“IT’S MORE THAN A PHYSICAL

YOU SHOULD KNOW

WHAT: The top Section 8 apartments in the city. Design and eco-friendly building are key points to enhancing affordable housing.

WHY: The federal government has threatened to cut funding to the program, which currently includes 93,000 units.

NOW: Consistently checking New York City Department of Housing Preservation website, nycho/how/hpd, can help people find quality housing.

OVERLOOKING THE HUDSON RIVER

Gerald Arzuga in the kitchen with wife Genevieve in their Castle Gardens two-bedroom apartment. Right, the exterior of the building with 24-hour security and roof garden.

“IT’S MORE THAN A PHYSICAL

“IT’S MORE THAN A PHYSICAL

“IT’S MORE THAN A PHYSICAL

“IT’S MORE THAN A PHYSICAL
Designed by New York architects Cook & Fox, the Vegemist is one of the most technologically advanced buildings in the city.

CHELSEA COURT
105 W. 17th St., Manhattan Palladia

IN THE HEART of Chelsea off Sixth Ave., Chelsea Court is one of the best-located affordable projects in the world. In a state of disrepair, the building was purchased for $1 from the city in 1994 by Palladia, which helps people stay off streets and out of jail. Now, it’s filled with 19 studios.

Architect Louise Braverman designed a skylight over a lobby lounge so natural light flows daily into common spaces. Artwork lines the entrance hallway. An outdoor terrace on the building’s second floor provides another amenity. Natural materials, pocket doors and industrial accents negate any institutional feel from the housing project.

Braverman earned a 2003 Merit in Design award from the New York State Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, and the building was featured in a 2004 exhibit on innovative design in affordable housing at the Smithsonian National Building Museum.

Victor Lopez pays $218 for a studio. The second floor patio is outside his door. He found Chelsea Court through the Doe Fund, a group that educates and finds homes for people living on the streets or in need of training.

“I like coming home and seeing the artwork,” says Lopez, originally from Williamsburg. “I know how nice this neighborhood is. I thank God for how lucky I am.”

VIEW OF New York Harbor, a $12 million renovation, and a brand new Barack Obama Computer Center—that can help turn around a housing complex. Set on a hill overlooking the affluent Staten Island neighborhood of Grymes Hill, the multi-building complex is the largest affordable housing project in the borough, counting more than 1,000 apartments.

New York Congressman Michael Grimm attended the renovation celebration. After beginning in 2005, the work at the complex was delayed because of financial issues. Now complete, it includes new kitchens, new boilers, elevator upgrades, intercom systems, brick repointing, storm drains, new lighting, new smoke detectors in each home, redesign and renovation of all lobbies, and increasing energy efficiency in common spaces and units.

“This is an example of how quality housing can improve the lives of tenants and make a once-troubled housing complex a safe and comfortable place,” says Rishi Pandey, an investment banker turned Unithree manager. “There is a pride that you didn’t feel before.”

Waterfront Living has never been More Affordable

ALL BUILDING PHASES — NOW FHA APPROVED

• Low 3.5% Down Payment
• Flexible Credit and Income Qualifying Guidelines

ENJOY THE PERFECT COMBINATION OF CITY & SUBURBAN LIVING!
Brand new community on a 6-acre waterfront park and promenade with views of the East River and the Whitestone Bridge. Our New York ENERGY STAR® Homes lower monthly utility bills and reduce the overall cost of home ownership. The location is close to all. The value is simply unbeatable.

FURNISHED MODELS OPEN DAILY 11AM TO 5PM
1, 2, 3 or 4 Bedroom Condos starting at $340,000

718-358-8088 • PowellCoveEstates.com

NEW YORK ENERGY STAR® Homes use less energy, save money, and help protect the environment.